CRNCC-OCOSA Symposium:

Keep On Rockin' - Sexuality and Aging

How do older people understand sexuality, intimacy and its relation to quality of life?

Do views about sexuality differ by sex, race, ethnicity, ability, sexual orientation?

What is the current state of knowledge of care providers toward sexuality and aging?

What additional education and training are needed for those who provide health, social and personal care, long term care and supportive housing?

What best practices can be learned from international experiences?

Given Canada's increasingly diverse and aging population and the challenges of providing a range of care so that people can stay at home in their communities, the topic of sexuality and aging is timely.

This symposium will help inform policy and practice for government policy planners, political decision makers, university researchers, health care managers and providers of community services, personal support, long term care, and residential care as well as social and supportive housing around key issues in this area.
